frequently asked questions...

How long have you been playing the piano?

I started playing when I was a kid. I used to love to sit down at my grandma's piano and figure out the melodies I heard on TV and radio. Mom and dad started me in formal piano lessons when I was 12, but after three years of basically "faking my way" through them, I quit. The problem with my taking lessons, from the very beginning, was that I didn't have any desire to play classical music. I wanted to write and play my own music. I just had no idea how to do that. That all changed my freshman year of college when I spent a semester studying music theory. That opened my eyes to the patterns in the keyboard, and once I could see and understand those patterns, I was able to teach myself to play the music I had been hearing in my head all along. After that, I spent a few years playing piano and keyboards for a variety of rock bands, but I soon realized that doing the "band" thing was keeping me from my true love - the piano. I left the "rock scene" behind to focus on composing for the piano and completed my first album of original piano works when I was 25 years old.

How do you go about writing your songs?

Most of my songs come to me through improvisation, just playing around on the piano until an interesting chord progression or melodic riff catches my ear. I then develop it, crafting the melody or the "mood" of the piece until the song structure begins to take shape. Once I see where the piece is going, I embellish it, smooth it out, and before long it has form, substance, a beginning and an end.

How long does it take you to compose a song?

Anywhere from two hours to a couple of years. Most songs take me six to nine months to arrange before I am completely satisfied with them.

Do you write down any of your compositions?

No, I play all my songs from memory. I have had others transcribe my most popular songs to sheet music, though. You can buy sheet music for most of my songs from my web site at davidnevue.com

Can you read sheet music?

To a limited degree. If I put the effort into it, I can usually work out an intermediate-level song from sheet music. But honestly, I've always been more interested in writing and playing my own creations. What I enjoy about the piano more than anything else is the process of creation, making something new out of nothing. If I need to learn a popular song for some reason, such as for a wedding, I'll learn it by ear from a recording, if at all possible.

Who are your biggest musical influences?

I'd have to say the music that has influenced me the most was the music I was listening to during my college years. I was really drawn to progressive rock acts at that time, especially bands like Rush, Pink Floyd, Jethro Tull, Renaissance and Kansas. Other major musical influences include Kate Bush, Clannad, Jeff Johnson and the early U2 records. I believe all of those have influenced my songwriting style. As far as the piano goes, were it not for my being introduced to the music of pianist George Winston, I don't think I would have ever considered writing for solo piano. So Winston's music was certainly the biggest influence in that regard. Finally, in terms of classical music, I most enjoy and identify with the piano works of Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Debussy.
